Indonesia Vying to be Asia's Next Manufacturing Hub?

"Several companies have announced plans to expand into Indonesia. In May, General Electric said it's exploring the possibility of making Indonesia its business Southeast Asian business hub, while South Korean electronics giant LG plans to open an air conditioner plant in West Java this month." ~Jun 2014, CNBC

Boasting the world's fourth-largest population at 250 million people and a new leader and administration, Indonesia is positioned for a new era of growth and economic revival. Low labor costs and government's ambition to wean off its dependence on natural resource exploitation is driving the country to recreate itself as a low cost manufacturing hub. But the sector is not without challenges. Inadequate infrastructure, power outages and a more investment-friendly policies are some issues to reckon as the country strives to compete with other Asean nations as the next manufacturing powerhouse.

CMT's NEW Indonesia Manufacturing Summit discuss and assess how the sector will emerge in light of the new 'Jokowi' administration.
