"Formulating for Africa's new consumers!"

Africa is now one of the most exciting new markets for Home and personal care products, with rapid urbanization and increasing GDP growth. It is estimated that the present 300 million middle class Africans is set to reach one billion by 2060 in Sub-Saharan Africa alone! The African region as a whole is forecast to be home to close to three billion people by 2065 from the current one billion – more than the combined populations of China and India. Making the potential of the African consumer market tremendously exciting.

The fastest growth category in the personal care segment is haircare & skincare! In order to effectively deliver the right products to the African consumers, companies have to understand the specificities of African skin and hair. Hence, L'Oreal has set up a research and innovation centre in South Africa 2 years ago. It is the group's seventh research hub globally and aims at studying African hair and skin specifically, as well as the beauty routines and expectations of sub-Saharan consumers. Another strategy, used by the cosmetic industries operating in East Africa, is to create smaller sized packages to counter the price sensitivity of demand in local markets.

Presently the big global brands are dominating market share and expanding their influence in the region. More and more production facilities are being set up to meet the growing demand.

African market stays key to Godrej Consumer growth... In December 2017, GCPL inaugurated its factory in Maputo and is one of the biggest employers in Mozambique... 15/7/18, www.devdiscourse.com

Dabur completes acquisition of 2 personal care products firms in South Africa 6/4/18, www.economicstimes.indiatimes.com
