The focus on marine litter and circular economy objectives across the world is further intensifying market pressures, as increased volumes of recycled PET resin and fibre erode demand for virgin product. The rapid fibre market growth over 2017-2018 absorbed a potential capacity surplus, but growth has already declined significantly this year. The US/China trade spat, risk of conflict in the Middle East, and various other global political and economic issues make it seem impossible for demand growth to absorb the new supply, and thus a shakeout of capacity at various stages in the PX to PET value chain now seems inevitable over the next three years.

Find out more from our expert Industry panel including recycling and sorting technology companies as well as Brand owners on their circularity goals.
