Molded fiber packaging is gaining traction with the expanding application in the food and beverage industry. The global growth in e-Commerce and environmental sustainability also accelerated R&D and investment in this packaging solution.

With the surge in demand for sustainable packaging solutions with protective packaging characteristics (e.g. logistics friendly), it's not surprising that current demand is outpacing production for molded fiber packaging products. New manufacturing capacity are coming on-stream to meet this global demand, and new partnership are also forged to further drive innovation to address demand, such as high-performance barriers and PFAS-free for food-contact packaging.

Advancement in machinery and technologies, such as molds and tooling is narrowing the price difference between molded fiber and plastic packaging products, hence making economic sense apart from being a sustainable solution.

Raising concerns on packaging waste has led to stringent measure to reduce the use of single-use plastic, hence proven to be a boon for molded fiber packaging industry, as well as alternative fiber materials from hemp, bamboo, and recycled fibres.

The above means good news for the industry, as we look forward to new technologies, expansion and new markets.

Join us and our expert speakers at CMT's 2nd Sustainable Molded Fiber Packaging Solutions on 13-14 October
